While many of us have strived to move into an all digital world, printing is still a necessary evil for most people. If you're a Chromebook user, printing can be a bit of a pain, but thanks to some recent changes by Google, it just got a little bit more convenient. RELATED: Seven Useful Chromebook Tricks You Should Know About Traditionally, Chromebooks have relied exclusively on Google Cloud Print for all printers are Cloud Print for all printers are Cloud Print ready, which can cause issues for anyone trying to print from a Chromebook. Fortunately, Google recently added a way to add local printers to Chromebooks—it's not as simple as it is on other PCs, but at least it's something. We'll cover both local and cloud methods in this post, so you'll be covered either way you go. How to Use Google Cloud Print, I want to note that this assumes you've already gone through the necessary steps to set your printer up on your network. Each manufacturer is different, so I'll direct you to their instructions to learn how to get yours set up. If Your Printer Is Cloud Ready If your printer is cloud ready, you can easily do everything you need to do from your Chromebook. To find out if your printer is cloud ready, jump over to this list and look up your particular model. There are two different generations of cloud ready printers: version 1 and version 2. These versions are noted on the Cloud Ready Printers page—if it doesn't have a "V2" indicator, then it's a V1 printer. V2s are easier to set up, so we'll tackle that first. Once you've confirmed that your model is V2 cloud ready, you can add it to your Chromebook by doing the following: Open the browser, type chrome://devices in the address bar, and press Enter. Find your printer in the New Devices menu and click the "Manage" button next to it. Click "OK" (or whatever button) to make it happen. Jump over to Google Cloud Print on the web to make sure your printer has been added. Done and done. If your printer is V1, things get a little tricker and more proprietary. Unfortunately, you'll need to find how to add it specifically from the manufacturer. Sorry. You could always just buy a new printer, which honestly might be easier. If Your Printer Isn't Cloud Ready Technically, you can add any printer with Wi-Fi to Google Cloud Print, requires of whether it's "cloud ready" or not. The problem here is that you can't add a non-cloud ready or not. The problem here is that you can't add a non-cloud ready" or not. The problem here is that you can't add a non-cloud ready" or not. add that printer to Google Cloud Print by doing the following: Add your printer to your computer. Open Chrome, type chrome://devices in the address bar, and press Enter. Under "Classic Printers," click Add Printers. Select the printer you want to add and click "Add Printers." ready printer. Woo! How to Use a Local Printer on a Chromebook You know what's neat? Local printers now work on Chromebooks! This has been a long time coming, and you can finally bypass the Cloud Printer requirement and straight up add a printer to your Chromebook. In Chrome OS version 59, Google added this feature to the stable channel, so pretty much everyone running Chrome OS on a relatively modern device should be able to access it now. Unfortunately, it's not as simple adding a printer to a Windows PC or Mac, but at least it's possible now. RELATED: How to See Who's Connected to Your Wi-Fi Network Before you try to add the printer, you'll need to know its IP address. There are many ways to do this, and we've outlined some of them in this guide. So find the IP address of your printer, write it down, and come back here. Then, jump into your Chromebook's settings menu by clicking the system tray, then the gear icon. Scroll down and click "Advanced," then scroll some more till you see the "Printing" section. You're almost there. Click on "Printers," then Add Printer. From here, give the printer a name and input its IP address that you found earlier. All the other settings should be fine left at the default. On the next screen, you may have to enter your printer info wasn't listed here. I assume it's because mine is cloud-ready, but I can't be sure. From there, you can just click "Add" and in theory it should connect. Of course, these are printers we're talking about, which are also known that "the world's most difficult tech." So things can (and probably will) go wrong. If that happens, you'll just have to troubleshoot your specific model of printer, unfortunately. Once everything does get lined out, however, you should be good to go. Screenshots are among the most widely used images on the Web today. They are great for writing your own how-to articles at work, or for reporting program errors to technical support teams. These helpful tips will show you three ways to capture great screenshots and get them ready for printing. The most well-known way to capture screenshots is with the Print Screen to take a snapshot of your entire screen, or press Alt. Print Screen to take a screenshot of just the active window where you are working. 2. You can then paste the image into e-mail messages, Office documents, or image editors. Many people like to print their screenshots from Paint, the basic image editors. Many people like to print their screenshots from Paint, the basic image editing program that comes with all versions of Windows, because it lets you crop and resize your images. 1. Snap your screenshot with the Print Screen button as described in the section above. 2. Click on the Windows Start button in the lower left corner of the screenshot into Paint. 4. From here, Vista users simply select File and then Print to print their screenshot. Windows 7 users select Print from the ribbon menu. For a more flexible approach, try the Windows Snipping Tool. It is available in all versions of Vista (except Basic) and Windows 7. 1. Find the program by going to Start, All Programs, Accessories; look for "Snipping Tool." 2. Click the drop-down arrow next to the New button to reveal the types of screenshots you can capture. The extra options with the snipping tool include the ability to perform a rectangular snip of any size and the ability to create a free-form snip of any size and the a your screenshot, you need to first save your file. Click on the Save icon, or go to File, Save as..., and you will have the option to save your snip as a JPEG, GIF, PNG, or HTML file. 5. Once the file is saved, simply double-click on the file to open it in the default program of your choice, and select File, Print... from the menu bar. The print process is run in the background allowing the user to continue with other tasks. See also background. When people hand you a Moo MiniCard, they don't surreptitiously slip the business card into your hand; they splay out their set of cards and let you choose your favorite one. Then they tell you about the image on the back, whether it's a photo from a vacation, a product shot, an avatar or an innovative digital design. And though the pint-size cards may not fit neatly in your Rolodex--they're only half the size of traditional business cards--their colorful appearance and slick, high-quality feel make you take notice. Richard Moross, 30, came up with the idea for MiniCards late one night in 2003. As the strategic planner for a design firm, he was losing sleep thinking of a product idea. He thought about Coca-Cola's mission to have everyone in the world in arm's reach of a Coke and started running through the everyday items he had around. Moross looked close--to his pockets--and hit on business cards, realizing that when it came to people promoting their personal websites and blogs, they were still often scribbling their URLs on napkins or whatever else was at hand. Moreover, people were developing other aspects of their online identities, like MySpace pages and Flickr accounts, that didn't yet have a place in the physical world, and a traditional business card just seemed too stuffy to do the job. With MiniCards, Moross cuts away the blank space that makes up much of a business card and incorporates a personal image on the back. But when his design firm didn't have the means to develop the idea, Moross branched out and started Moo.When Moo finally launched MiniCards in 2006, funded by $5.5 million in venture capital, users could create their cards with images uploaded directly from their Flickr accounts, and they could use a different image on every card in their 100-card sets. Now users can upload photos from multiple social networking sites, like Bebo and Facebook, as well as directly from their computers. They can also order premade designs from about 40 artists. The cards guickly became popular with the Web 2.0 crowd that uses them as a supplement to traditional business cards. And since launch, there has been international demand, which Moross hadn't predicted. When the first batch of foreign-language cards was printed, they came out with question marks in place of text and Moross had to add support for multiple languages. The London-based company now translates its site into German, Italian, French and Spanish. Expanding beyond its signature MiniCards, Moo also offers sticker books, cards and postcards, and it just launched full-size business cards. The products have also created an aftermarket for accessories, like custom MiniCard holders, which Moo sells. Hand-made card holders made by Moo fans can also be found on craft site Etsy.com. Tapping into its enthusiastic community that posts photos of Moo products on Flickr, uses the prints for art projects and packaging design and even sends MiniCards out chain-letter style, Moo crowdsources some designs. Last holiday season, Moo hosted a Flickr competition for card designs and received more than 3,000 entries. "Within a month, we had more holiday cards than Hallmark," Moross says. The company continues to reach out to its community through a candid blog, parties, product development sessions and an "Overheard at Moo" Twitter stream, which all foster the company's fun, approachable and transparent culture. Moross also makes sure to listen. He has his entire team copied on customer service requests so they know of any problems, and he makes sure to monitor any mention of his company online. And mention it, they do. By encouraging customer communication and having a "blank canvas" product that inspires creativity, Moo benefits from organic word-of-mouth marketing. Its message is only helped along by the nature of the Moo product." Everything we manufacture is handed from one person to another," Moross says. And by making his product's style stand out with distinctive shapes, heavy paper stock and a lustrous finish, even the most custom orders are recognizably Moo. Then there are the company's partnerships with social networking sites. Though Moo initially partnered only with Flickr, the company is now paired with Bebo, Facebook, Fotolog, LiveJournal and Vox, which collectively reach more than 100 million users. Moo has also opened up its API, so any other company that would like to design an integration can. It has already seen programs that generate 3D barcodes for stickers, create a MiniCard mosaic from a large image and import Flickr photos sorted by color. Though Moross declined to share sales figures, he did say that in 2007 Moo shipped 10 million MiniCards--which are sold in $20 packs of 100--to 180 different countries. The company has also tripled its work force from 11 to 30 since 2006. Now he's focusing on expanding his young company. "We had a really successful idea that was a single products."
