Please note! This essay has been submitted by a student. Wuthering Heights is a story of two characters, Catherine and Heathcliff. It's a complicated story of love and passion, with moments of revenge and the supernatural. It begins with a man named Lockwood who is in search of renting a home in Thrushcross Grange. He takes a visit to see his landlord, whose home is a perfect representation of Heathcliff. Not having his opinions swayed by what he sees he still goes through with renting the home. Later on in the story in a harsh winter, Lockwood becomes ill, by time he asks the housekeeper Nelly to tell him about Heathcliff's house and his strange behaviors. While she speaks, Lockwood keeps tab inside of his diary. Nelly started speaking about her childhood where she was a servant at the house. At the time, the Earnshaw family lived there, Mr. and Mrs. Earnshaw as well as their children. Essay due? We'll write it for you! Though she hated him at first, Catherine and Heathcliff later became best of friends. Hindley is still very cruel to Heathcliff who is not bothered by it because he's Mr. Earnshaw's favorite. Mr. Earnshaw later sent Hindley away to college. Mr. Earnshaw died three years later and Hindley inherited Wuthering Heights. After the death of Mr. Earnshaw's death Hindley's anger begins to worsen over time. He comes back with a wife, Frances and proceeds to get revenge against Heathcliff. Once a privileged son, Heathcliff is now a common worker, forced to work in the fields. Though his relationship with Catherine is as strong as it can be. Women weren't allowed to own any sort of property and this allowed Heathcliff to gain ownership of Thrushcross Grange when he married Isabella, also controlling it completely when he forced Cathy to marry Linton. There was also the mindset that women were helpless creatures who always needed protection. This was shown when Edgar prohibited Isabella to meet Heathcliff. He clearly thought he was protecting her, but he was really stealing her sense of speech and self-freedom. The most important Gothic element of the novel is its setting. An old house set at the top a single hill, with no other houses around it. It has "grotesque carvings" and rough inhabitants. The inside was just as unwelcoming with rough designs, little light, and cold temperatures. The weather and elements around the house are similar. Strong wind and heavy storms were common. This is the complete opposite to Thrushcross Grange, which is described as "opulent", "carpeted with crimson", "beautiful". The owners of the two houses are complete opposites too. At the Heights, everyone is tougher while the owners of the Grange are softened and more civilized by luxury. It is a parallel that runs through the whole novel - the passionate Earnshaws versus the civilized Lintons. The Yorkshire moors that the novel is set in are also very Gothic. They are wild; almost with a life of their own and the role they play is crucial in the story. They are a metaphor for all that Catherine and Heathcliff represent; passion, violence and a love that transcends even death. She also hears him mumbling throughout the day speaking to someone who isn't there. Because he is close to death he feels that her haunting spirit is as close as ever before. The next morning, Nelly was with Heathcliff for breakfast and he asked Nelly if they were alone, as his eyes fix on a person Nelly couldn't see. He then looks outside the house, and becomes scared from what the ghost told him. Nelly saw nothing and tried again to get him to eat. He later starts addressing Catherine, and speaking to her as though she were alive and present. The closer Heathcliff grows to death, the more contact he seems to have with Catherine's ghost. Heathcliff gives another clue of Catherine's haunting when he tells Cathy that even if everyone else hated him, there was still one who would want his company, chasing him always. Nelly enters Heathcliff's room, his eyes intense at her, and his lips smiling. But he's dead, and the window to the moors is wide open. His face looks so happy that Nelly tries to close his eyes, but they will not. His expression of joy frozen for eternity. In the last chapter, we have the final incident of supernatural. Many people believe Heathcliff is a ghost, and some claim to have met him along the moors, by the church, or in Wuthering Heights. Joseph also believes he has seen Heathcliff and Catherine looking out her window on nights. One day Nelly met a shepherd, who was only a young boy. He claimed to have seen Heathcliff and a woman, who would not let him pass on the road. Nelly tries not to believe, but still continues to not go out alone at nights. Mr. Lockwood, a gentleman from the city, rented in Thrushcross Grange, an estate located in rural Yorkshire in 1801. Lockwood went to meet his landlord, Heathcliff who resided in Wuthering heights an estate past the moors. Mr. Lockwood was not pleased with the culture of the residents in Wuthering Heights. The residents were indifferent to social customs. On Lockwood return, he was forced to spend in a haunted bedroom that belonged to Cathy. Mr. Lockwood screams attracted the attention of Mr. Heathcliff, surprisingly pleads for Cathy's ghost to come inside the room. The story of Lockwood as a narrator makes a complete circle. He comes renting and later completes the narration by reaching to clear his debt obligations with Heathcliff. Lockwood had a chance of proposing and marrying Catherine; it was not to be. The next morning Mr. Lockwood returns to Thrushcross Grange feeling sick requiring bed rest. Mrs. Dean a servant updates Mr. Lockwood about Wuthering Heights where she grew up. Mrs. Dean narrates how Mr. Earnshaw, from a trip to Liverpool, picked a homeless boy from the streets taking him with him to Wuthering Heights. Mr. Earnshaw named the boy Heathcliff, after a son who died earlier. Members of Mr. Earnshaw family despised Heathcliff. Cathy and Hindley branded Heathcliff a gypsy because of his dark hair and unpleasant temperament. Mr. Earnshaw's open favoritism of Heathcliff only intensified Hindley's hate and violence towards Heathcliff. Cathy, Hindley's sister, befriended Heathcliff. Hindley went to college and returned with a wife upon his father demise. Hindley became the new master of Wuthering Heights forcing Heathcliff into servitude. Cathy liking for Heathcliff makes her teach him how to read and write as they played in the moors. Women from privileged social circles take time to teach men in their lives how to read and write. Cathy taught Heathcliff to read and write while Catherine tutored Hareton. Out of curiosity, one night Cathy and Heathcliff sneaked to Thrushcross to observe how the wealthy, blond and blue-eyed Linton children, Isabella and Edgar lived. Accidentally a dog bites Cathy, and the Lintons catch them. Cathy was received into the house while Heathcliff suffered rejection being sent home because of the color of his hair representing a 'gypps' background. When Cathy returned after five weeks, she had acquired the mannerisms of the upper class. Cathy demeanor changed as well as her dressing. Cathy dressed more elegantly and started becoming distant to Heathcliff. Cathy accepted Edgar's marriage proposal even though she truly loved Heathcliff. Heathcliff felt humiliated and run away. Cathy felt hollow and distraught by Heathcliff disappearance. Heathcliff returns after three years, a wealthy and attractive gentleman. Heathcliff return is driven by revenge over violence meted on him in childhood. Hindley's wife had died leaving him to raise their son, Hareton. Hindley was unhappy with God for allowing his wife to kill. He turned into alcoholic and abusive. Hindley gambled with Heathcliff took control of Wuthering Heights and struck a loving relationship with Hareton. The relationship between Hareton and Heathcliff was for convenience. Old flames never die. Heathcliff visited Cathy at Thrushcross reigniting their friendship. Their love returned though Heathcliff respected Cathy marriage to Edgar. Isabella developed a crush on Heathcliff. Heathcliff manipulated Isabella to revenge childhood snobbery. Heathcliff married Isabella out of vengeance. He mistreated Isabella, abusing and degrading her. Cathy became severely unhappy and miserable when she learned that Heathcliff forbidden from visiting after a fight between Heathcliff and Edgar. Cathy became sick and withdrawn during her pregnancy. Cathy and Heathcliff managed to have one last meeting where they criticized and scorned each other for not staying together. Cathy dies that night while giving birth to Catherine. Isabella ran away from Heathcliff and raised her son, Linton in London alone. Edgar raises Catherine alone in Thrushcross Grange. Hindley died, and Heathcliff also lifted Hareton alone in Wuthering Heights. Out of malice, Heathcliff raises Hareton as an uneducated servant instead of his socialite status. Heathcliff used the opportunity to revenge Hindley's mistreatment on Hareton. Catherine met Hareton while they were playing in the moors during their dogfights. Catherine discovers that Hareton is a cousin and a servant. Isabella died when Catherine approached thirteen years. Linton came to live in Thrushcross Grange. Heathcliff insisted on raising his son and thus forced Linton to come live in Wuthering Heights. Linton was sickly and pampered. Heathcliff cleverly used Linton to gain hold of Thrushcross property as Edgar was dying. Heathcliff engineered marriage between Linton and Catherine. Catherine then nursed Linton until he died. Catherine always despised Hareton. Out of loneliness, the two became friends. Heathcliff gives up his revenge mission. Heathcliff losses the will to live and was found dead lying near a window. Catherine and Hareton regain their inheritance. Catherine regained control of Thrushcross Grange while Hareton recovered Wuthering heights estates. The two were now free of the social burdens of the society free to fall in love and get married as they wished according to Lockwood.
