Solanki's implications do not even need to be spelt out. Its editor-proprietor, Ramu Manilal Patel, 54, one of the few journalists running his own paper, today sits under a tarpaulin on the pathway separating the machine rooms (which also had 2,000 precious hand types) and his offices (where he had also kept his stock of over 4,000 books). In the process the media seems to have followed the dictum of 'publish and be damned' irrespective of its impact on the general public." However, the report of the team of the National Union of Journalists (NUJ) arrives at just the opposite conclusion: "It is not worth having a press if it does not reflect the events as they happen.
